Need for tighter regulations in banking: expert

Indian parliamentarian Manish Tewari has highlighted the necessity of central regulators tightening their grip on banking systems to ensure that no other economic turmoil is inflicted due to financial mismanagement

Manish Tewari

Tightening banking systems and the development of a proper regulatory framework would help prevent the current financial crisis from turning into a humanitarian crisis, said the Indian National Congress spokesperson. Speaking at a session on 'Practical answers for overcoming political and economic obstacles', held as part of the Doha Forum yesterday, Tewari, said the Indian banking system could withstand the turmoil due to nationalisation policy initiated in 1969. The second phase 11 years later helped strengthen the Indian banking sector further, he recalled. "Compare this with what happened in countries like the US where a number of banks bit the dust. The US government had to intervene to save a number of its banks from crumbling," he said. The speaker wondered if it was the absence of regulatory interventions at appropriate junctures that resulted in the fall of a number of financial institutions worldwide. "The Indian government doesn't believe that nationalisation alone could boost the economy. It is clear in its perception that it is not government's duty to do business but it is certainly its duty to check the greed of financial institutions," said Tewari. Calling for more regulation in the financial system, Tewari sought the introduction of sterner measures while granting licences for banks and other financial institutions. "Such concerted steps would eventually strengthen the economy," he said. The speaker also felt that transparency in corporate dealings is a necessity and in the ongoing crisis its necessity is more felt than ever before in many countries. Highlighting the importance of GCC governments diversifying their economies, Tewari said such initiatives would stand them in good stead in the event of a fall in the prices of their main exports.

QU speaks Arabic at its new website

Qatar University yesterday launched the Arabic version of its main website, replicating the English version in both design and content. The Arabic QU website was developed with the aim of reinforcing the institution's identity, and to communicate to Arabic-speaking audiences, especially prospective students and their parents. The new website contains translated versions of pages providing such key information as research, library, and students, and other university and office pages. Introductory information in Arabic is provided for each college and programme, except for College of Shariah and Islamic Studies which is fully Arabic. Both websites share and use the same functionalities and applications such as staff and faculty directory, events calendar, submission forms, banners, newsletters, QU radio programme, QU in the press, and guide to expertise.

However, the English and Arabic news items are fed through QU online magazines Campus Life and Campus Today respectively. QU president Prof Sheikh Abdulla al-Misnad said: "The Arabic website is a valuable addition to the multiple communication channels that the university uses to address its Arabic-speaking audiences in Qatar and across the region. Managing two websites with thousands of pages is not an easy task but it is a valuable investment that reaffirms our commitment to enriching QU's Arab identity and reaching out to our various audiences." External Relations department director Zeina al-Azmeh said: "Although 67% of Arabic universities in the GCC countries use mainly English websites, Qatar University felt the need from the onset for a bilingual site." The official added that the English website will continue to be the homepage being the main channel of communication with the world.

A Dohaland official briefing visitor at the expo.

Dohaland is taking part in one of the world's largest expositions, 'Better City, Better Life', in Shanghai. As part of the Qatar Pavilion, the developer is showcasing its Musheireb project as well as developing international relations and opportunities within. Opened last month and running until October 31 this year, the Expo is attracting up to 240,000 visitors per day. As many as 7mn visitors are expected throughout the expo. The Qatar Pavilion highlights the loss of traditional architecture in modern times, an issue directly addressed via the design and planning of the Musheireb project which has endeavoured to create a 'new architectural language' for the region. The Qatar Pavilion, built to resemble a historical fort, showcases the heritage and traditions of the country. Seagoing traditions and Bedouin lifestyles, displaying handicrafts and re-enactments of sights and sounds associated with desert life are among the attractions. "The Dohaland ethos is to converge the tradition and sense of the past, our heritages and architecture, into modern living and working spaces," said marketing director Imad Nached. The QR20bn project aims to revive the old commercial centre of Doha. The development is adhering to high green building standards, with a projected gold LEED rating, while sustainability technologies and practices prevail throughout. The construction contract for Phase 1A of the project was awarded recently to a consortium of Hyundai Engineering and HBK Contracting, with a 2012 expected completion date. The entire project is to be completed by 2016.

Exploring new horizons
